

Scots-Irish Origins, 1600-1800 A.D.

Genealogical gleanings of the Scots-Irish in county Londonderry, Ireland.

PART TWO – THE PLANTATION OF LONDONDERRY, c.1600-1670 INCLUDING APPENDICES:

1. PHILLIPS' SURVEY OF 1622 AND THE 1630 MUSTER ROLL OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LONDONDERRY.

2. THE SUMMONISTER ROLLS/COURT RECORDS OF COUNTY LONDONDERRY, 1615-70.

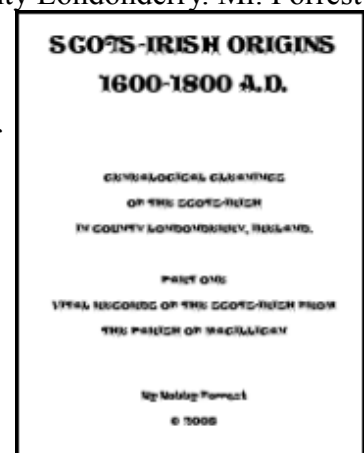

By Bob Forrest, B.A Hons; Economic and Social History (Queen's University, Belfast). 65 pages + 3 maps + 1 illust.

Part two in the series Scots-Irish origins, this volume focuses on the seventeenth century plantation of county Londonderry and makes available for the first time two important genealogical sources, the 1630 Muster Roll and the Summonister (Court) Rolls c.1615-1670 for county Londonderry. Mr. Forrest has utilised the Summonister Court Rolls, the 1622 survey by Phillips and Hadsor, the 1630 muster roll and the 1641 depositions to write a short history of the 'Plantation of Londonderry c.1600-1670.' He traces the development of the Londoners' twelve plantations, as well as the growth of urbanization within the county focussing primarily on Londonderry, Coleraine and Limavady.

In his history of the Londonderry plantation, Mr. Forrest attempts to trace the origins and development of the Scottish colony in Londonderry in the early seventeenth century. Although the early plantation was undoubtedly English in character, Londonderry was attractive to the Scottish given its close proximity and the ease of mobility given the trade links that had been developed between the ports of Derry and Coleraine with Scotland's western seaboard. Mr. Forrest traces several migratory waves of Scots colonists during the seventeenth century. Many of the settlers were, undoubtedly, economic migrants forced to leave Scotland with its expanding population, rising prices and rising unemployment. The increasing numbers of Scots, especially from 1630, was vital to the maintenance of the plantation. The response of the rural inhabitants in Scotland to the Plantation was in sharp contrast to that in rural England where relatively few people opted to move to Ulster. The surveys of 1619 and 1622 reveal that the English settlement was small and in decline even before the devastating impact of the native uprising in 1641. The diminution of the English colony contrasts significantly with rise of the Scottish presence. Mr. Forrest argues that without the continuous migration of Scottish settlers, the Londonderry plantation would undoubtedly have failed. However, by the end of the seventeenth century a self sustaining settlement of British colonists (primarily Scots-Irish) had established itself in the county.

The roll of the individual is also analysed, especially the contribution of Sir Thomas Phillips, the servitor responsible for the new town of Limavady, and he was also an overseer of the Plantation. Sir Robert McClelland of Bombie, Kirkcudbright, Scotland became a major landlord controlling the Haberdashers' and Clothworkers' proportions from 1618/19, which in effect was a massive estate that ran from Coleraine into the heart of the Roe Valley at Limavady, which became a bridgehead for Scottish entry into the north of the county, thus facilitating a process known as 'colonial spread'.

This book contains the names of hundreds of British settlers and native Irish from the early seventeenth century, which will be of enormous interest to genealogists, family and local historians alike. In this volume, there is a transcript of the Summonister Court Rolls for County Londonderry, which are extant for the period 1615-1670 (Appendix 2). The rolls appear to be fairly intact apart from a lengthy interval from 1641-1653, which reflects the impact of the native rising upon administration. The rolls are a useful source of surnames containing as they do, hundreds of names (629 variant surnames) of those English, Scots and Irish who came to the attention of the courts and provide a local window through which we can view life in seventeenth century Londonderry. The 1630 muster roll lists the names of 1,930 British men of arms-bearing age (Appendix 1) and identifies their location in the county. The local historian will also find much of interest in the Summonister Rolls, the 1622 survey, the 1630 muster roll and the deposition material, which contain much detail at the micro-historical level. This volume makes these unique sources available for the first time in a collective account.

VALUABLE SOURCE OF SURNAMES:

In this book are the names of many Lowland Scots who migrated to Londonderry during the seventeenth century. These early settlers can be considered to be the founding fathers of the Scots-Irish in the region. One hundred years later, after the first colonies of British settlers were established in both Virginia and Londonderry, the descendants of Ulster planters began to emigrate in increasing numbers to the colonies of New England, Pennsylvania, Virginia and the Carolinas. Between 1718 and the War of Independence, half a million Scots-Irish left Ulster for the British colonies in North America. Many of their forbears can trace their origins to the early period of British settlement in county Londonderry. Surnames can provide much useful insight, if not proof, of family origins in Ireland and this volume now brings those Scots-Irish pioneers within the grasp of the researcher.

There are 1,727 variant surnames contained in this volume that locate name to place including:
